Text 1

My childhood was protected by love and a comfortable home. Yet, while still a very young child, I began instinctively to feel that there was something lacking, even in my own home, some false conception of family relations, some incomplete ideal.

5 This vague feeling of mine began to shake itself into the conviction about the time my brother and I were sent to school. The education of the English boy, then as now, was considered a much more serious matter than the education of the English boy's sister. My parents, especially my father, discussed the question of my brothers' education as a matter of real importance. My education and that of my sister were scarcely discussed at all. [...] A girl's education at that time seemed to have for its prime object
10 the art of 'making home attractive'—presumably to migratory male relatives. It used to puzzle me to understand why I was under such a particular obligation to make home attractive to my brothers. [...]

The answer [...] came to me unexpectedly one night when I lay in my little bed waiting for sleep to overtake me. It was a custom of my father and mother to make the round
15 of our bedrooms every night before going themselves to bed. When they entered my room that night I was still awake, but for some reason I chose to feign slumber. My father bent over me, shielding the candle flame with his big hand. I cannot know exactly what thought was in his mind as he gazed down at me, but I heard him say, somewhat sadly, 'What a pity she wasn't born a lad.'

20 My first hot impulse was to sit up in bed and protest that I didn't want to be a boy, but I lay still and heard my parents' footsteps pass on toward the next child's bed. I thought about my father's remark for many days afterward, but I think I never decided that I regretted my sex. However, it was made quite clear that men considered themselves superior to women, and that women apparently acquiesced in that belief.

25 I found this view of things difficult to reconcile with the fact that both my father and my mother were advocates of equal suffrage. [...] From reading newspapers aloud to my father I had developed a genuine interest in politics. [...] I was 14 years old when I went to my first suffrage meeting.

Megan Rapinoe and Alex Morgan call for equal pay after winning women's world cup

World Cup winners Megan Rapinoe and Alex Morgan Alex Morgan have appeared on the cover of the latest issue of Sports Illustrated, highlighting the importance of equal pay in football in the magazine.

5 The US women's football team has been vocal in their fight for equal pay in football for several years, with 28 members of the squad filing a gender discrimination lawsuit against the US Soccer Federation in March.

10 Their plight for equal pay has received increased levels of attention as of late thanks to their victorious World Cup campaign, resulting in a resounding chorus of "equal pay" being chanted around the Parc Olympique Lyonnais stadium following Sunday evening's final.

In the latest issue of Sports Illustrated, out on 15 July, Golden Boot winner Rapinoe explained that the next step in achieving equal pay in football is to back up words with actions.

15 "This game has done so much for all of us. We've put so much into it. It's a testament to the quality on the field, and I don't think everything else is matching that," Rapinoe stated. [...]

The US women's football team has won four out of eight Women's World Cups since the first tournament was held in China in 1991.

20 The total prize money awarded to the teams competing in this year's Women's World Cup was approximately $30m (£24m). Meanwhile, the total prize money awarded to the men's teams who competed in last year's Men's World Cup was around $400m (£315m), more than 10 times the amount.
